

TWO AUTO BIOGRAPHERS GIVE inSITE97 SOME WHEELS

By Robert L. Pincus
ART CRITIC

Turning cars into art is nothing new. This kind of mechanical alchemy has been going on for more than a half-century, since Salvador Dalí filled the hulk of a Parisian cab with a costumed mannequin and vegetation for a Surrealist exposition in 1938.

Among post-1945 works, the key sculpture is at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art: Edward Kienholz's "The Back Seat Dodge '38." The massive 1964 assemblage contains an altered Dodge, flocked in blue and inhabited by intertwined sculptural figures.

San Diego and Tijuana are places of the moment for artists' autos. inSITE97 allows artists to think big — with its focus on new, commissioned works for unusual sites — and some of them have.

Betsabée Romero's "Jute Car" contains a 1955 Ford Victoria; Rubén Ortiz-Torres' "Alien Toy (Unidentified Cruising Object)," a radically modified early '90s Nissan truck. They are arguably the two finest works in this sprawling show.

Romero's transformed Ford rests high on a hill in Colonia Libertad, a short distance from the steel fence. Her transformations of it are startling and lovely. She has covered the exterior of the car in canvas and decorated that with a floral pattern. The car's interior is filled with paper roses.

The obvious aspect of the pattern is its femininity. Romero intends for her car to be a counterpart, a rejoinder, to low-rider or chola uses of the car. Her iconography is aggressively feminine in the same way the latter is blatantly masculine.

Even Romero's title is a homage to the feminine. It alludes to the cloth on which an image of the Virgin of Guadalupe appeared. Jute (ayate in Spanish) is the material from which that cloth was fashioned.

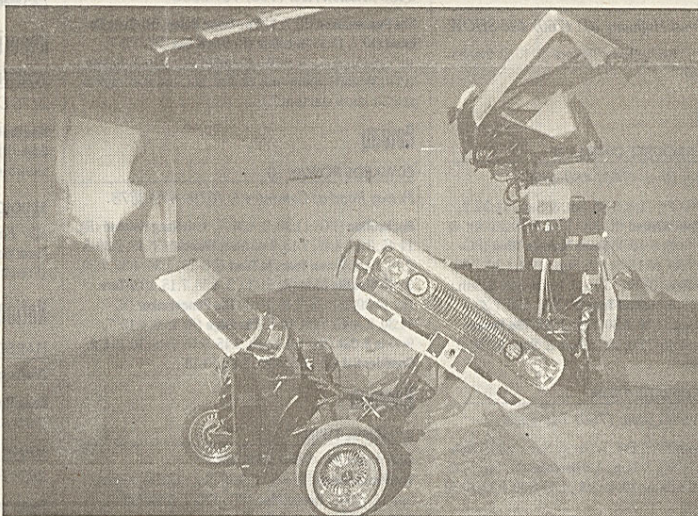

Her car becomes a spectacle, not only because it rests at the top of a steep hill, but by virtue of its installation. The dirt around its tires is sloped so that the rear end of the car is tilted upward. Seen from the right vantage point, her floral car looks as if it has landed after a leap across the border fence.

In visual terms alone, the effect is electric. It also sets in motion thoughts about the relation of cars like this one to both cultures.

Aging U.S. autos and trucks get a second life in Mexico after Americans discard them. In Tijuana, you see models that have virtually disappeared from highways north of the border. Romero's car becomes a symbol for that cultural phenomnon — whether by design or inadvertently.

The tradition of low-riders and car customizing is a cross-cultural phenomenon. Back in the '40s and '50s, it thrived in Southern California and Tijuana. And the car that leaps the fence is an elegant monument to that notion.

Of course, Romero has taken all these issues and superimposed a fresh vision on them. That's what all strong artists do. And she has produced a work that will, by all rights, endure far beyond inSITE97.

Already, it has acquired an ardent following: its neighbors in the colonia. They have become protective of the piece, the artist says proudly, guarding against defacement or destruction. And the dogs in the neighborhood appreciate it, too. At least three or four were getting shade under its chassis.

A breed apart

Ortiz-Torres' project is a car of another breed, a kinetic sculpture whose techniques come straight out of street culture. The approach is called Bed Dancing, Radical Class. Sal Muñoz, Ortiz-Torres' collaborator, is a master of the form.

The vehicle no longer resembles a conventional truck, but a scrambled version of one with several moving elements. It looks otherworldly, except for the parody of Border Patrol striping and logo on its sides — and Ortiz-Torres' accompanying video toys with that idea deftly. Sci-fi style aliens make appearances on the big screen that provides a backdrop to his "Alien Toy (Unidentified Cruising Object)."

Puns ripple beautifully through this piece, as they do through the artists' brilliant and funny photographs, seen locally at the Centro Cultural de la Raza (in 1993) and at the Museum of Photographic Arts (in 1995). Here, he collapses the difference between undocumented aliens and outer space aliens neatly. And at the same, he's bringing an alien style into the art arena.

In the process, he's asserting that a Radical Bed Dancer is as vital as kinetic classics like Jean Tinguely's assemblages, with their many mechanical elements, or George Rickey sculptures, with their gracefully moving arms. But Ortiz-Torres isn't being polemical about the whole thing: His and Muñoz's "Alien Toy" is flat-out terrific to look at. Car culture fuses harmoniously with Post-Conceptual Art at 1901 Main St. in Barrio Logan.
